From the Playwright

As is consistently true, history has a tendency to repeat itself.

The same could be said of the events that transpired in the United States in the Spring of 1968 and how they mirror our nation's socio-political climate today.

We remember well the daily reports of unarmed black men and women gunned down by police. We remember the around the clock media coverage of Black Lives Matter protesters on one side of the street and police officers armed in riot gear on the other. We remember the marathon of videos depicting nationwide police brutality posted to our timelines and the unapologetic light they shined on systemically enforced racial bias in law enforcement. Racial bias that could have started honest conversations and much needed policy changes, but were ultimately drowned under the tsunami of "All Lives Matter" hashtags and those gasping for air while wheezing, "I can't breathe!"

This time of great turmoil led to one the most divisive and controversial presidential elections this nation has ever seen. But it wasn't anything new to our history. For in Memphis of 1968, their citizens were also living in a time of great racial divide. A divide that saw the rise of the Black Power Movement, the fall of the Civil Rights Era, and the Mayoral election of an avowed segregationist who, during his campaign, called for the "unionization of the white vote" to "Make Memphis Proud Again". While the Sanitation Strike itself polarized the city, ultimately it was the citizens of Memphis who found the resolve to put their differences aside in order to fight for the equality of all...after the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King.

We aim to use the world of musical theater to present a palpable yet unwavering account of a not so distant moment in our collective pasts. While our presentation is a bare bones representation of the music and narrative to date, through further development we look forward to building toward the fully immersive experience that will allow audiences to take a deep dive into this moment in history and the fictional benefit concert and characters inspired by it.

Our musical resonates today, because it continues to ask the following questions: Can the American people truly come together, despite the differences that threaten to tear us apart? Is it possible for everyday citizens to create systemic change without putting themselves in mortal danger? Is it possible for America to reconcile its violent past and the crimes committed to birth a nation or are we destined to repeat the history, missteps, and oversights of those who came before into the foreseeable future?

This show serves as a looking glass on which audiences can peer into our shared history, reflect our present and look into the future with the question, "Where will I choose to stand?" dancing on our tongues.
